Excerpt: . . . own a base Usurpers foreign sway; No--when ye march to guard your sea-girt shore, Return victorious, or return no more! Greece, in her freedoms most propitious hour, Waged impious wars, in quest of spoil or power; And Rome, through many an age, unjustly brave, Fought to oppress, and conquerd to enslave. E'en the bright wreaths of Edwards, Henries, claim, Crownd not the cause of Freedom, but of Fame; While fond Ambition, with misguided zeal, Sought Englands glory more than Englands weal. But when of old, to chase a foreign host, , The painted guardian of our Albions coast, O'er her white cliffs descending, from afar, On Caesars legions pourd the tide of war, When scythed chariots swept, th' ensanguind plain, The Bards, enraptured, sung this patriot strain: Ye generous youths, who guard the British shore, Return victorious, or return no more! Again Britannia sounds her...
